My Day with Two Moms Baked Goods

by HEATHER on FEBRUARY 17, 2011 · 0 COMMENTS · in FAMILY LIFE, FOOD

Like with everyone, there are a few things about me that are somewhat like a trademark.

- I use to live on a sailboat in Vancouver
- I have curly brown hair and freckles
- I love spicy food
- I cannot make chocolate chip cookies – or any other baked goods for that matter

It has been that last point that has become a bit of a pain. A real thorn in my side. My Achilles Heel. You see, my kids love to bake. They love to surprise daddy with a sugary lip-smacking dessert. But, usually daddy gets a hockey puck masking as a cake. Or a door stop that resembles a brownie.

So, I am sure you can imagine how excited I was when I was invited to attend a cooking class at Two Moms Baked Goods. They do the hard work for you. Ingredients? Purchased. Measuring? Done. Oven temperature right? All set. I simply showed up with my daughter, put on an apron and began the fun task of assembling the ingredients.

To be clear, I didn't really do anything. My daughter did it all. She massaged the butter until it was the right temperature to be creamed. She added in the flour, sugar, cocoa and vanilla. Mixed them up. Stuck her fingers in the batter for a taste test. And declared it yummy. I somewhat supervised, chatted to the other moms and helped clean her messy hands. Two Moms Baked Goods, they did the rest – like cleaned the table and gave us samples to try. When all assembled, we went home with two trays of brownies – ready to be frozen or baked.

My husband was a happy man that night. Perfect brownies, for once.

But here is another reason I love Two Moms Baked Goods. My mother in-law has a deadly allergy to nuts. Not all nuts, but a lot of them and it seems the list grows each year. Another nut gets added. Guess what, Two Moms Baked Goods is a nut free facility. I can "make" her dessert and not even worry about it.

And another reason? They have shop above the cooking school where I can purchase pre-made
